7 Army Troops Company – a WA Sapper Unit

Whereas field companies in WW2 were the basic engineer units attached to a field formation such as a division, army troops companies were formed to work in the base area. With a high proportion of tradesmen the three construction sections, later platoons, (1/49) could build or maintain roads, bridges and buildings, while the two electrical & mechanical sections (1/46) could operate a workshop or operate and maintain electrical, water supply and refrigeration systems in the field. CoyHQ had 3/28.

Maj George Shaw formed the unit in October 1940 and they were in camp when called up for full time duty in December 1941. Over the next 18 months the sections worked around Fremantle and Perth on a wide variety of construction and maintenance jobs. Projects included field defences on Rottnest, extensions to the Hollywood hospital, the AA position at Buckland Hill, improvements to camps all around the south west, irrigation at the York veterinary hospital, new road bridges at York and Moora and jetties on Garden Island. One ongoing project was the preparation of the demolition plan for Fremantle Port, and in June 1942 a trial run had all charges in place only three hours after they received the order at their camp at Guildford. To demonstrate their versatility they also had field teams undertaking a rush job to map the coastal area north and south of Harvey.

In July 1943 7 Army Troops Company left for the convoy route between Alice Springs and Larrimah. CoyHQ, one construction section and the workshop were at Morphett Creek with other sections rotating between Alice Springs, Mt Isa and Elliott. They also operated four water drilling rigs around NT. As well as the main workshop the E & M sections manned the water, power and refrigeration plants at Tennant Creek, Morphett Creek, Banka Banka, Elliott, No 3 Bore, No 6A Bore, Camooweal and Mt Isa. Temperatures reached 54°C at Morphett Creek in January 1944. 4 Pl moved north to Noonamah in May 1944 and the other construction platoons joined them in August, working on facilities to support a planned two division attack towards Singapore from the Darwin area. This project was abandoned and with secure sea transport to Darwin the convoy route was closed. 7 Army Troops Company moved to the RAE Depot at Kapooka in December 1944.

They left for Bougainville in April 1945 to work around the Torokina base area. Here 4 Pl joined the WA sappers from 2/2 Forestry Company operating the sawmill, while the rest of the unit maintained the base and operated the power, water and refrigeration systems. After the Japanese surrender they supervised the Japs as they built the POW cages before leaving for home in December.

After several informal get-togethers 7 Army Troops Company (RAE) Association was formed in 1953 and they held regular reunions each year until 2011. In most years this was a dinner meeting attended by CE W Comd along with the Col Comdt, but in other years they had field tours, including on to a Bailey Bridge being built by 13 Fd Sqn. Jack Benari published the unit history 'Sundry Notes & Anecdotes' which was mainly for members, but a copy is in the RAE Assoc Archive.
